OUR MISSION

MAKE RECOVERY POSSIBLE, ACCESSIBLE, AND SUSTAINABLE.

We ensure that anyone in or seeking recovery from substance use and mental health disorders has free, low-barrier access to the resources, community, and practical support they need. We believe there are as many pathways to recovery as there are people pursuing it—and that no one heals alone.

OUR VALUES

CONNECTION

Connection is the opposite of addiction. Every recovery journey needs a strong network of support along the way, and everything we do is designed to foster and strengthen those ties.

ACCESS

Everyone deserves a supportive and compassionate community, no matter who they are or where they are in their recovery journey. That means inclusive and accessible programming that is low barrier and cost-free.

EDUCATION

Information and resources that help guide someone through their personal recovery journey shouldn't be difficult to access or understand. Our community is best served when we freely share our knowledge.

INNOVATION

The most effective recovery tools are the ones tailored to those who are utilizing them. We adapt and respond to the growing and emerging needs of our community.

LETTER FROM OUR EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

MAY YOUR HOPE ALWAYS OUTWEIGH YOUR DOUBT

- Todd Snider, "Like a Force of Nature"

I like opening these letters with a line from a song. Takes the pressure off me to be profound right out of the gate. That line above, from the great (Oregonian) Todd Snider, who we lost in November of 2025, is followed in Todd's song "Like a Force of Nature" by the not-quite-as-inspirational counterpoint/punchline, "until this old world finally punches you out."

The year between July 1, 2025 and June 30, 2026 was (again) one of challenges and changes. Everything you've heard from us repeatedly throughout the last several years remains true. More people in Oregon are suffering from substance use and mental health disorders than ever before, and there are still not nearly enough resources to provide suffering people with the support they need. Oregon's overdose death rate is 31% higher than the national average. Organizations like ours are still facing significant budget reductions and anxiety about what lies ahead. This is all true. I see evidence of it all around me each day as I walk from my home in Northwest Portland to the Club. I know many of you do, too.

And yet...

The Alano Club is as vibrant and bustling as I can remember it being at any point in my decade here. Thousands of people come through our doors each week to find community, support, and a path to recovery that suits their own individual needs. I am heartened every day by our community and our staff. Last fall, when some Oregonians could not access their SNAP benefits, the Alano Club staff pooled our own resources and created a makeshift food pantry in the Café to help ensure that no one in our community went without. That mentality — What else can we do? How can we help? — has been the core of this organization and community since its earliest days, nearly eighty years ago. It is in everything we do, from the meetings that fill the Club with fellowship to every workshop, class, program, and event on our calendar. To spend my days working alongside these incredible people, bearing witness to the power of this incredible community — that's the antidote to cynicism. It has carried me along not just in my work, but in my recovery, when little else could.

There really is no other organization like ours anywhere in the world. We wouldn't be doing our jobs, though, if we weren't constantly asking ourselves those questions: What else can we do? How can we help? Whether that is a new program, a pop-up food pantry, or something as seemingly cosmetic as new carpeting and furniture, there is always more we could do. It's one of the challenges of the work, to be sure, but it's also a privilege to be in the position of knowing there's more work to be done and trying our damnedest to do it. It's a responsibility each and all of us here take very seriously.

There is more work ahead in the coming year but, for a moment, it's important to pause and reflect on the year past and the work we did. I am so proud and grateful to have been a part of it.

May your hope always outweigh your doubt,

Kasey Anderson

OUR PROGRAM PILLARS

For some community members, participation at the Alano Club looks like attending one or many of the mutual aid meetings held in our historic community center, open 365 days a year. For others, it means discovering new pathways to connection, support, and healing through our programs, partnerships, and events.

For everyone, it means coming together around one foundational truth:

NO ONE HEALS ALONE.

OUR YEAR OF IMPACT

100% of Alano's services and community programming were offered free of charge.

9,280 people in or seeking recovery participated in Alano's fitness and wellness programming, community workshops, and events.

1,007 community members received one-on-one, peer-delivered services from Certified Recovery Mentors.

2,085 individuals received free naloxone through Project RED's partnership with NEXT Distro.

150 community members assisted through new peer-led Transitions Lab workshops.

130+ weekly mutual aid meetings served more than 10,000 monthly visitors.

new cost-free community events and workshops expanding access to healing, connection, and recovery support including:

- monthly classes such as somatic sobriety and sound bath meditations, and financial literacy and career development workshops
- launched fitness programming for women and members of the LGBTQIA2S+ community at our Recovery Gym locations, and added an Indigenous Men's fitness group to Recovery Gym programming
- hosted a community BBQ to celebrate AA Founders' Day with more than 300 people receiving free meals and sharing in fellowship. We hope to make this an annual event!

PEER SUPPORT

On any given day, the Alano Club's staff of Certified Recovery Mentors can be found across the Tri-County area offering support and resources to individuals who may need assistance in anything from systems navigation and practical skill-building, to one-on-one mentorship in the development of an individualized recovery plan.

In 2025, Alano's peer-delivered programs—PeerConnect, The Recovery Gym, and the Recovery Toolkit Series—served more than 32,000 people in the Portland Metro area. Forty-one percent of participants came from priority populations in communities impacted by racism.

In addition, Alano made 631 referrals to culturally and linguistically specific mutual aid resources and organizations in the Portland area.

Our peer-led services show what becomes possible when people work side by side, share lived experience, and care for one another in community.

> "Working with a peer mentor who shares my lived experience as a queer person allowed me to be fully myself and build a genuine, nonjudgmental connection. Having regular support to share struggles, celebrate successes, and navigate major life events like surgery kept me motivated and reminded me I wasn't alone."

HEALTH AND WELLNESS

Recovery is supported by whole-person wellness. Whether community members are learning to prepare nutritious meals on a budget, joining cardio classes, or practicing mindfulness, Alano's health and wellness programs meet people where they're at and offer multiple points of connection and community.

80% of participants in Plates for the People—Alano's free monthly cooking class—received SNAP benefits.

Earlier this year, The Recovery Gym began a collaboration with Blanchet Farm, a men's residential treatment center operated by Blanchet House. TRG Coach, Ryan Samel, leads weekly CrossFit classes for the residents, alternating between classes held at the farm and classes held at The Recovery Gym's Hillsboro location.

EVIDENCE-BASED HEALTH AND WELLNESS PROGRAMMING CREATES MORE PATHWAYS TO LONG-TERM RECOVERY, CONNECTION, AND SUPPORT.

See a small sample of what our community members experience when they come to our sound baths for a nervous system reset.

RISK REDUCTION

Eliminating barriers to overdose prevention supplies, services, and supports is an equitable, person-centered strategy to help reduce our state's overdose deaths.

Project RED is Oregon's largest non-governmental naloxone distribution program, providing cost-free supplies, educational materials, and Compassionate Overdose Response trainings in all 36 counties across Oregon.

This year, Project RED distributed more than 17,000 doses of naloxone to individuals, businesses, public entities, community-based organizations, recovery community organizations, and mutual aid groups.

42% of supplies distributed were to uninsured individuals.

37% of supplies distributed were to individuals who had experienced or witnessed an overdose prior to receiving supplies from Project RED.

70+ organizations throughout the Tri-County area received Alano's Compassionate Overdose Response Training.

83% of individuals who received naloxone from Project RED reported they would not have otherwise had access to it.

> "There is a thoughtful and humanist approach behind Project RED's efforts. We are so grateful for the compassionate training, and I feel much more equipped to administer naloxone. Ellen [Program Director, Project RED] is so gifted at what she does!"

SELF-SUFFICIENCY

Person-centered, strengths-based, and community-involved support helps people build stability, confidence, and quality of life in recovery.

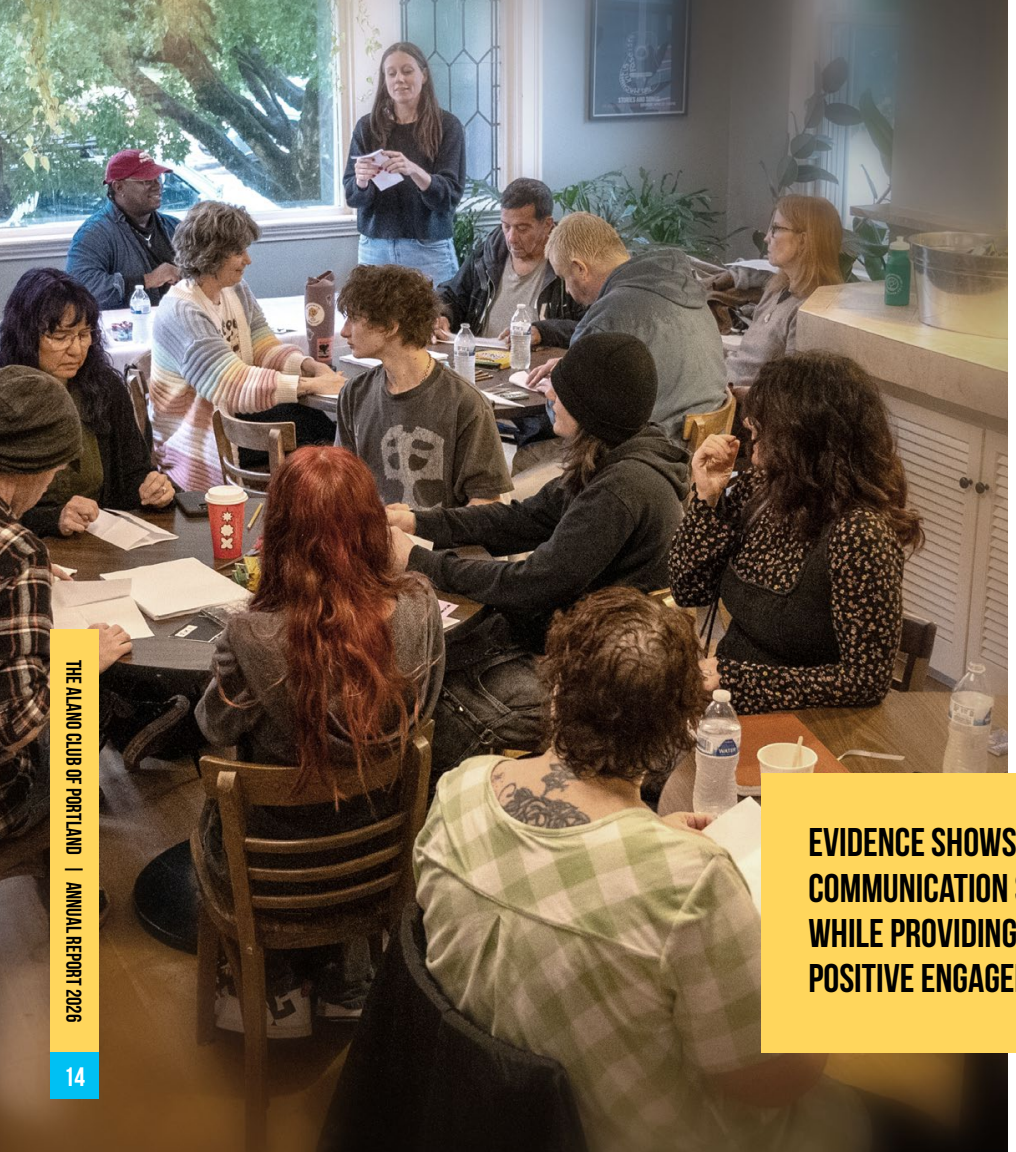

We believe recovery support must go beyond abstinence or harm reduction-based programming. Long-term stabilization becomes more achievable when people have access to evidence-based tools, consistent support, practical resources, and new connections.

Recovery can feel intimidating. By the time some people arrive at the Alano Club, they may be navigating personal, professional, or financial challenges. Our self-sufficiency programming helps reduce stigma, introduces approachable tools, and empowers people to begin again with confidence and continued support.

> “You need people with you while you glue everything back together [and] learn how to navigate different resources, ask for help, and advocate for yourself. This will help secure what you want in the FUTURE! My Transitions instructor gave me confidence, and I left with a foundation.”

CREATIVE EXPRESSION

In fall 2025, Alano hosted Recovery in Practice, a free two-day conference that brought together artists, authors, activists, and researchers for workshops, discussion panels, and creative events.

Sponsored by the McCormack Writing Center and Thunder Road Guitars, the conference centered the voices of formerly incarcerated, BIPOC, and other culturally marginalized artists, writers, and researchers in recovery from the Pacific Northwest.

Across conversations about creative practice, online communities of care, herbalism, meditation, and continued healing, Portland's recovery community grew stronger with every voice and every story shared.

EVIDENCE SHOWS CREATIVE ARTS PROGRAMMING IMPROVES COMMUNICATION SKILLS, SOCIAL SKILLS, AND SOCIAL INTEGRATION WHILE PROVIDING A MEANS OF SELF-EXPRESSION, COMMUNICATION, POSITIVE ENGAGEMENT, AND EMOTIONAL SUPPORT.

> “The Alano Club of Portland redefines what it’s like to be sober. It creates AND provides a lifestyle and new connections.”

HONORING TRANSITIONS IN RECOVERY

When we say we meet community members where they are at, we mean it.

For Leo, a Transitions Lab participant, Alano's newest peer-led offering arrived at a pivotal moment. He was completing outpatient treatment, committed to recovery, and working to organize the many next steps that would help him move forward after graduation.

From the beginning, Leo described Transitions Lab as a source of practical support and positive reinforcement. Instructor Wyndham offered individualized guidance, reasonable next steps, and steady encouragement to each group member.

"I'd turned my life upside down with drugs and alcohol—working for the weekend and living for my paycheck," and Wyndham's weekly presence and encouragement helped Leo stay focused and learn what community resources he qualified for. "What better place to go and concentrate? It was structured time where I focused on my resume and spent time on my goals after treatment."

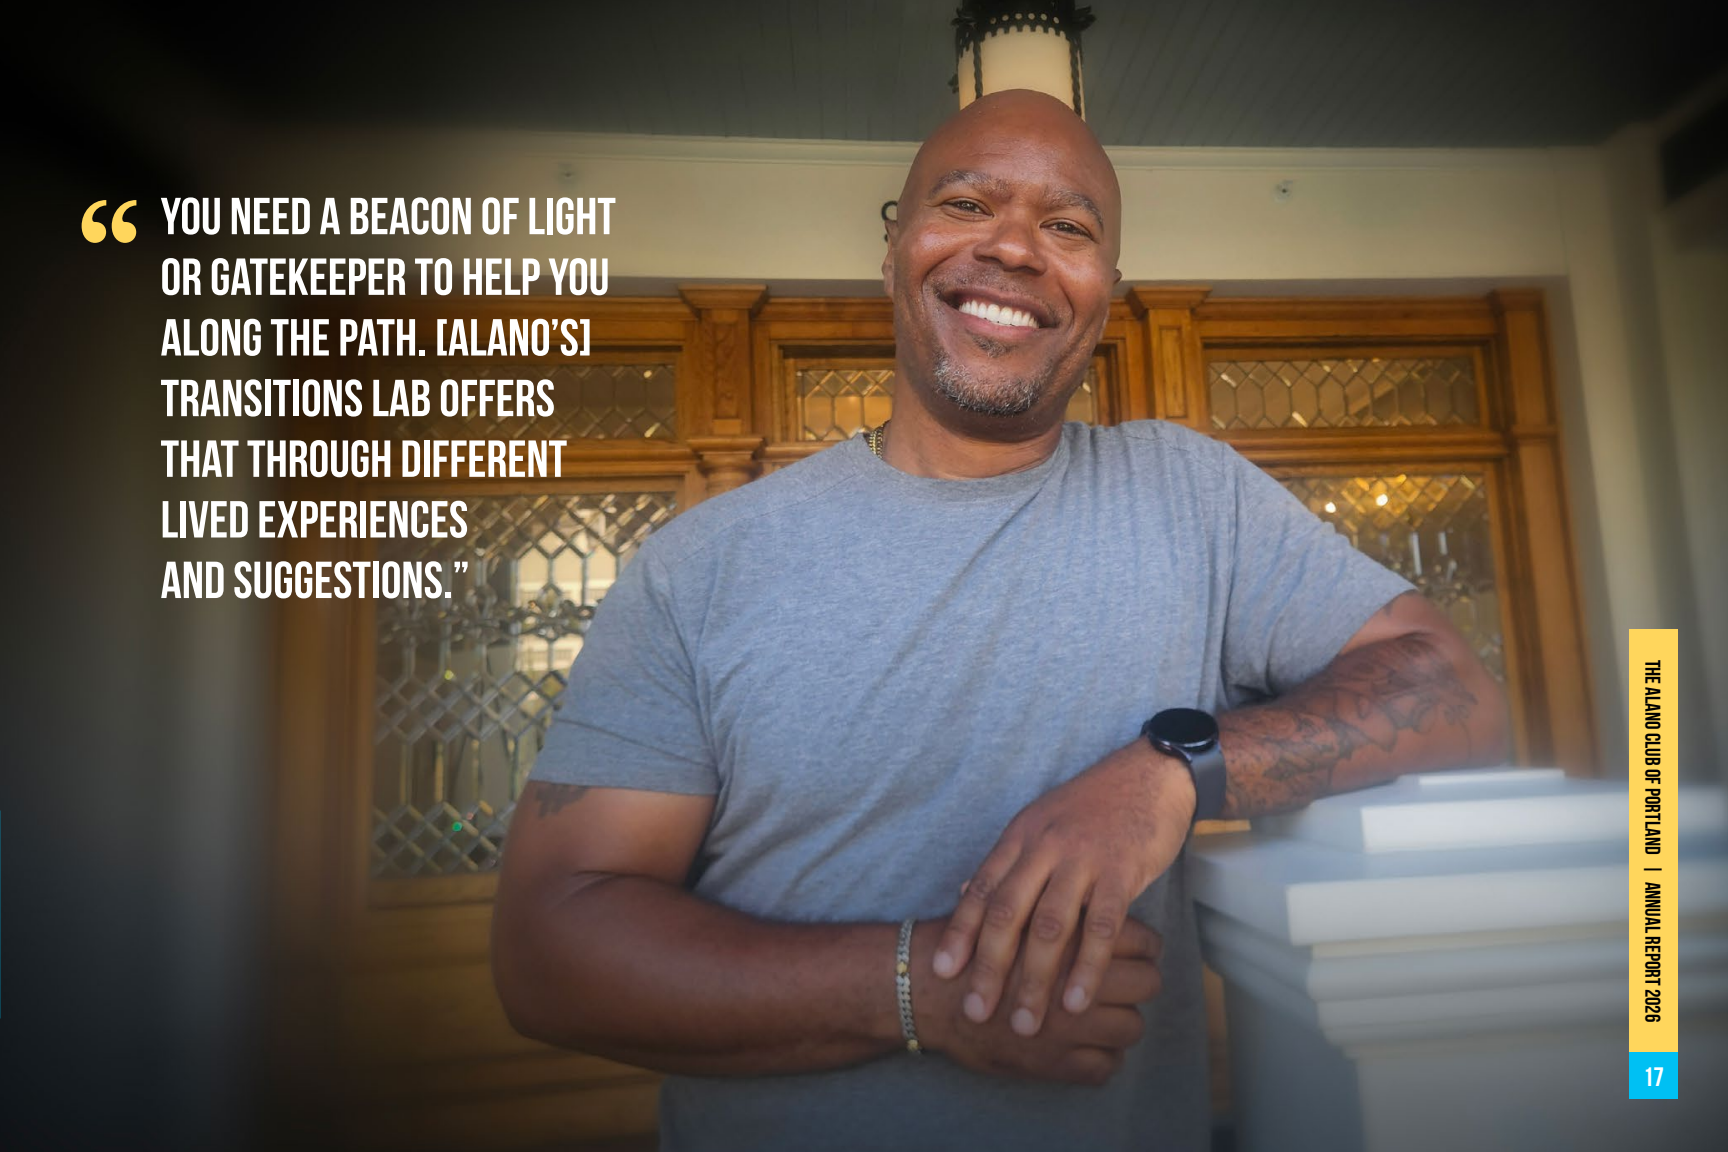

Leo's hard work and consistency with Transitions Group paid off quickly.

It was the week before graduation and Leo had a newly updated resume he was ready to start sharing. He wound up at the Alano Club, looking for an afternoon recovery meeting, when he heard about a nearby job fair. His peer mentor Drew helped him get to the job fair; before the fair was over, Leo was offered an interview. By the following Saturday, he graduated from treatment and had been hired.

"With us being in recovery, oftentimes we've isolated from society," Leo shared, "[we] waited 'til 10 at night to be part of the world. As far as becoming 'normal,' walking the path of recovery and becoming citizens of the world, it's important that we have examples of what it's like. We are literally transitioning from the old life to a new one."

Leo remains an active member of his recovery community, continuing one-on-work with his mentor, and still stops by the Alano Club for meetings every week. When we spoke, he had just over 120 days of sobriety and now works as an assistant manager.

WHEN WE SAY WE MEET COMMUNITY MEMBERS WHERE THEY ARE AT, WE MEAN IT.

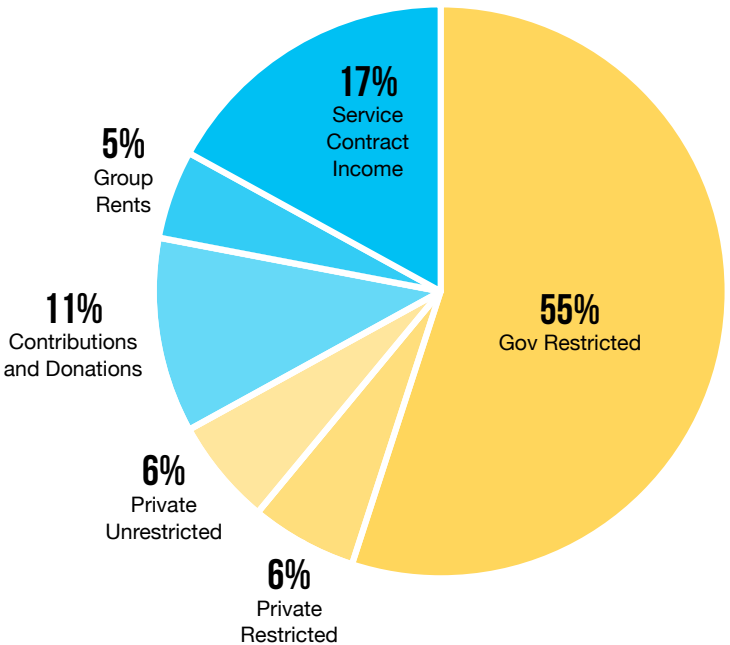

“YOU NEED A BEACON OF LIGHT OR GATEKEEPER TO HELP YOU ALONG THE PATH. [ALANO’S] TRANSITIONS LAB OFFERS THAT THROUGH DIFFERENT LIVED EXPERIENCES AND SUGGESTIONS.”

HOW WE USE OUR FUNDS

The past year brought significant reductions to public funding, which impacted not just the Alano Club, but many local and national nonprofit organizations like ours. Our operational funding was reduced by 15% after having already been reduced by 15% the prior year, threatening staffing levels and service delivery.

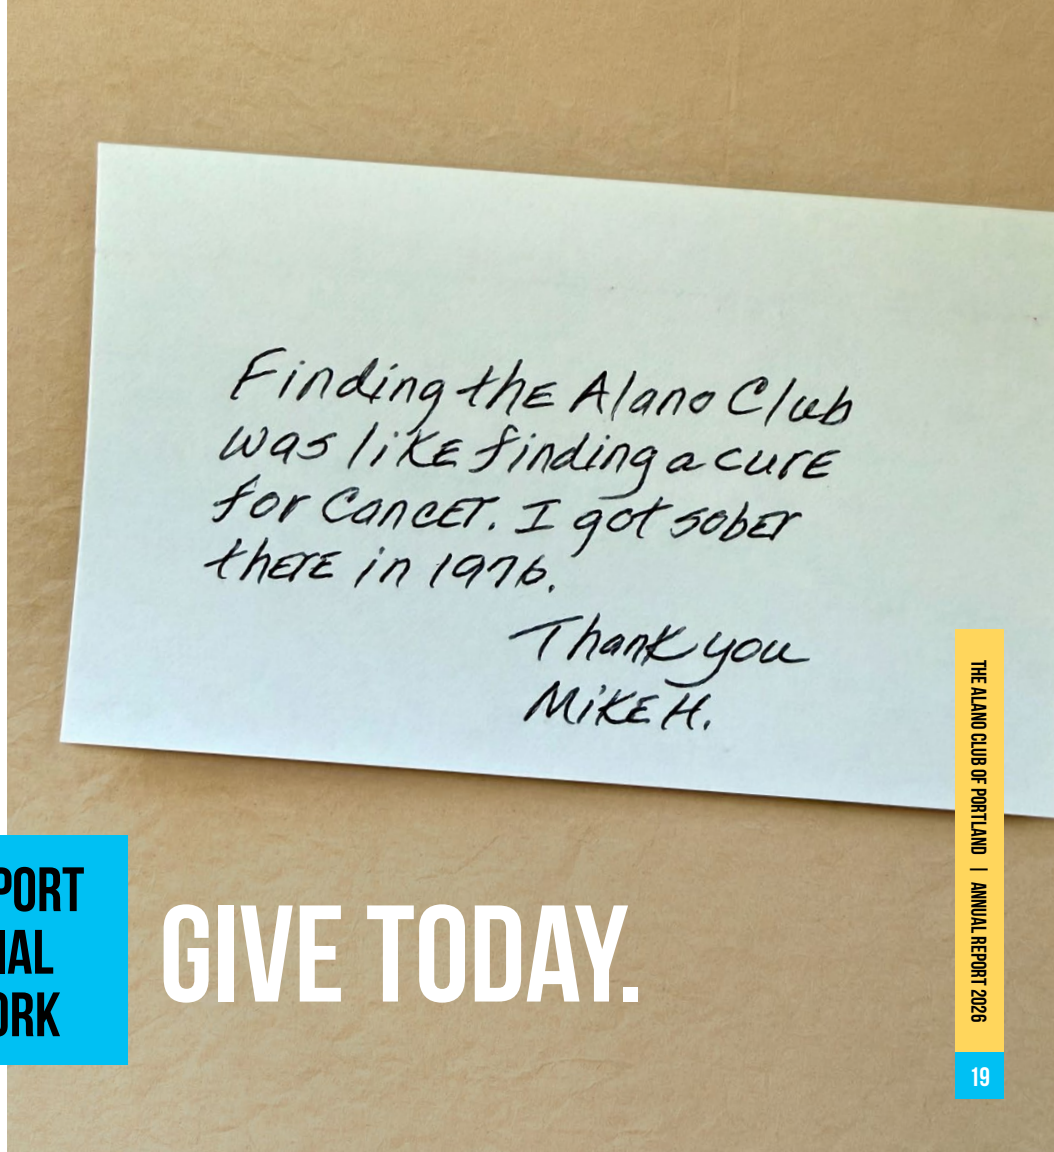

CONNECTION AND COMMUNITY ARE AT THE HEART OF EVERYTHING WE DO.

Donors and community partners at every level help us avoid significant program reductions and keep our services FREE and accessible to anyone who needs them.

As organizations like ours continue to face reductions of public funding, our monthly sustaining donors are vital to our ability to respond to community needs.
